The education of Rome and that of the early Christians overlap for many of the early Christians down to the 5th Century received their education at one or other of the many imperial institutions in the chief cities of Europe, Asia and Africa
AT ALEXANDRIA, CLEMENT and

ORIGEN endeavored to secure special education for Christians.

Tertullian, Cyprian, and Jerome worked hard to secure a Christian education for the youngest children; and Augustine condemned the heathen culture as hostile to the purposes and interests of Christianity.

The chief opposition came from scholars learned in pagan lore, and trained in heathen schools.
